

HOUSE OF HONEST LIGHT

Site: Naoshima Island, the art island

A home that embraces natural light, is a home that lets light express itself

Komorebi through the home

Dappling patches and shaded enclosure

Activity conscious light patterns

There is something about the tree that has always expressed honesty. The art of being complete, including any shadows. This home, and the couple who live in it, embrace living honestly, like under the dappling light or in the shade. Komorebi is the Japanese term for lightstreaks seeping through trees. Komorebi is a natural phenomenon and exists only because the shadow plays a part in creating 'completeness' of the effect. The form of the home, together with the intertwined wooden pattern reinforces the behaviour of komorebi, inviting light into the courtyard and other dedicated spaces in the form of dappling light. The light patterns differ per room activity, while allowing light and shadows to move through time.

Persona

Kenzo (42yr.) Cinematographer
He cycles around the island weekly to observe the changing nature and sculpture exhibitions through a lens. He enjoys observing the dynamic shadow, light and shadow that moves through the passing of time.

Hikari (38yr.) Architect
She spends her days in her studio, virtually meeting clients and draw inspiration from observing the complexities of nature that surrounds her studio. She enjoys observing the intrinsic shadow, the beauty and depth of a pattern created by komorebi.

The day for the sun and moon per room light principle

09:34
Kenzo walks back with early morning groceries, the roji welcomes him as he walks through the hallway where morning komorebi seeps through.

09:58
Hikari takes a moment to drink water in the kitchen, looking across the living room at the far landscape framed by the facade.

14:10
Kenzo analyzes his photo under the diffused light after a short trip around the island that he took to take photos.

17:52
As the sun sets and the home fills with amber light, the couple lounges out in the living space. Daylight is a big contributor to this.

23:00
Kenzo winds down the day, sits in the hinoki bath. The immersive retreat, with starlights above his head as the moonlight seeps through.
